The article of the Rt. Hon. Leonard Courtney in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, in which he pronounces squarely for bimetallism, has created wide comment and a decided sensation throughout England. It shows the growth of wise and fearless knowledge in this country upon the silver question. The fact that Mr. Courtney is a member of the royal commission on gold and silver, and that his conversion now gives the bimetallists a majority in that important body, is significant of what is going on in the empire.

NEVADA'S OPPORTUNITIES.

WHAT CAN BE DONE WITH INTELLIGIBLE WATER STORAGE.

An Old Sage-brushers Views on the Subject.

SAN FRANCISCO April 1893. ED. MORNING APPEAL; Carson Nev.

As a native son of your sage-brush State, I wish to say something, through your columns, regarding Nevada, her resources and her necessities.

I predict that Nevada will amount to nothing as long as her present mining operations continue to be the sole industry and agriculture and horticulture are not advanced. The reasons are as plain as the first letters in the alphabet. Nevada has, in the past, enjoyed the distinction of being the very first silver producing State. She has poured out millions of ounces of the white metal but of what lasting benefit has it been? Where are the great edifices that make a city? Where are the great industries that form a commonwealth? The capital invested in Nevada went into mining and milling buildings and enterprises which at the first can never be permanent or of lasting good. The wealth dug from the hill has gone elsewhere and Nevada is stranded. If to-day a second Comstock were uncovered the accruing benefit would be like a toad stood growth, sudden but not enduring. A population would flock in and times would temporarily improve but the end would be the same as now. When the silver pinched out the State would again be deserted. Mining has done more harm than good to Nevada inasmuch as the treasure has been taken away to build other States and the great forests for miles about the mines have been cut away to get in shafts and tunnels that must soon become worthless. The only good done in return was the payment of wages to men who invested elsewhere and left when times became dull. Of course the first proposition ever recurring in Nevada, is irrigation. Not only is irrigation possible in Nevada but it is absolutely the only salvation to the State. Nevada, topographically, is a succession of hills, mountains and valleys and therein lies the secret of her irrigation. First there are a number of splendid rivers, to say nothing of streams, that run millions of gallons of water annually to the great basin to sink, unused in the desert. There is not one of these rivers that does not run through a country full of natural opportunities for the storage of the escaping water. The Carson river to-day is booming full of the precious liquid, that should be arrested in a dozen artificial lakes all along its course. Thousands of acres lies contiguous to the Carson river, every one of which could be made to turn over a handsome income. Lake Tahoe, already dammed at Truckee could be raised four feet with a very small expenditure of money, thereby hoarding up a supply of water that would reach every parched acre for miles along the desert sides of the Truckee river. So it is with every river and stream in the State. In the mountains the springs and natural rain and snow fall should be retained in canyons and ravines. They would irrigate surprisingly large acres. Second is the consideration of artesian wells. So far in Nevada, there is hardly a single prospect hole for artesian water. The little wells that are now flowing amount to nothing. Artesian wells of good flow are never less than 500 to 2000 feet deep. These are the kind that Nevada should try. California has wells that irrigate whole farms, but they are deep. Nevada's conformation is favorable to artesian water and deep holes drilled in the valleys could scarcely fail of great results.

Again there is that ever faithful servant, the windmill. Hundreds of California farms and orchards are irrigated by home made mills pumping shallow wells. In Nevada, dug wells always get a good supply of water. Windmills there would make many beautiful and prosperous homes.

The people must not think all other States so much more blessed than Nevada. In California money is spent by the barrel full on irrigation schemes. Without water farmers here are as badly off as the Sagebrush people. The great Western country and dozens of others are fairly interlaced with monster canals that cost millions of dollars.

As for crops there are many that never fail in Nevada and many that would make new industries. Sugar beets grow like weeds in Nevada. There are fortunes in them. Your apples and potatoes are now in great demand here at prices that make our hair curl. Sidehill orchards on your sunny slopes there are the best kinds of investments.

Alfalfa on sagebrush land grows almost wild and is the strongest kind of feed for stock. Your creamery business should only be one of a dozen industries. Nevada should supply butter, eggs, beef, pork, potatoes, apples, wool and a dozen other commodities to her sister states. Hundreds of mills, factories and manufactories should hum along the banks of the rivers and thousands of wealthy farmers should trade at your cities. Never was a country blessed with such a climate, never were there better chances for prosperity if the people will wake up, shake off this ruining burden and take hold properly. The people must do something and bestir themselves, that the world may know that Nevada is a good field for capital.

I am glad to notice that you are belting the old mines and showing up their methods of paying officers upon the income of assessments. The system has been draining the State for monies to run a worthless lot of holes in the ground that have set Nevada way back in the march of progress.

Stir your people up to activity and let Nevada take the place that is hers by right,—abreast of the sister states of the glorious Pacific Coast.

AN OLD NEVADAN.

Hullo APPEAL.

Hullo; who's that?

Jack Furlong. Why in the deuce did you have your paper left at my house? I never ordered it.

A—Dempsey said leave it there from this on.

J. F—Wonder why he did that.

A—He said when you come to the saloon in the morning you took up too much time reading it, had to spell out the words and kept all the regular paying patrons waiting.

F—Well if he ordered it you bet your life he'll pay for it.

A—He said he'd pay for it willingly.

Hullo APPEAL.
